To Whom It May Concern:

I am seeking the right fit in the right career. I have had many different positions chiefly in customer service and retail, social services, and information technology. Most of all, I have sought to help others in each phase of my professional life. Rather than focus on one area, I am faced with the daunting task of creating a cover letter for Hire Autism and no cover letter can cover all my interests or specific goals. .

If I had to choose one interest, I would leverage my own life experience and social service along with being a long term job seeker to help others. My vision is to be a remote mentor and career counselor to aid those who have found themselves unemployed or underemployed, especially on the autism spectrum like myself. I want to take what I have learned to especially help those on the autism spectrum to find some meaning and joy in work, just as I have sought. Though I do not drive, the point of remote work is that I can reach many people in their own home. I want to be given a chance to build this niche. I am especially interested in this position because of my prior experience in the roles of social worker, pastoral care provider and supportive living services mentor. My combined experience in these areas and people skills would help others to become more self-reliant. In this spirit, I am in the process of earning a master life coach certification from Udemy.com which I expect to complete by October 1, 2021

Though I have done some web development training and technical support and though I am an introvert, I find myself drawn to helping others. I value my time as much as that of others. When I haven't been working, it is because of relocation, helping ill loved ones, or trying to overcome my own experience of denied or inadequate services. Hence, I have the impetus to create with others what has long eluded me in stable work.

I was diagnosed with Aspergers in mid-life, always knowing I was a bit different. My choices certainly would have been different had I been properly assessed and received services. What I have realized from this experience is that while I may not hold the space in a therapy session, I use myself as a tool and express empathy in my own genuine way. Most of all, my mission is to love and to serve.

I invite you to visit my site <https://www.dmjs.us> including my creative work to learn more about me. I look forward to hearing from you soon. Thank you for your time. Be safe and well.

Sincerely,
